Over the past 10 years, I've built my career on one simple principle: Work smarter. I'm the person who uses the creativity not only to "make things look pretty", but to solve problems with smart solutions, streamline inefficient procedures, and consistently strives to boost productivity. While you won't find the title "creative director" listed on my resume, I've actually been bringing creative people together, leading, inspiring and steering them on the right creative direction.

My last boss once told me that my positive attitude sets the mood of the room and I have the ability to lead any team. I've always had a knack for communicating with people—the easygoing and the difficult alike—and I'd love to bring that skill to my next position. Among my colleagues, I'm known as the one who can stay calm and pick up the pieces, no matter what amount of you-know-what hits the fan.

The value of seeing the entire process of graphic design, from the initial spark of creativity to completion, continues to inspire me. The important thing is that I do my work with knowledge and passion. While dedicating myself to each project I keep my mind and heart open to feedback, appreciating the opportunity to learn and grow. I'm a go getter, never settling down and always in improving!
